

MAD may be well past its 1960s heyday, but every once in a while the magazine shows that it's still capable of surprising us with political satire and social commentary. The most recent reminder is MAD's timely take of Norman Rockwell's famous 1958 painting "The Runaway," which memorably depicts a kindly state trooper talking to [...]

Read more: <http://robot6.comicbookresources.com/2014/08/mad-takes-aim-at-police-militarization-with-rockwell-homage/>