

With Fast Five making more than $600 million at the worldwide box office, Universal is quickly moving forward with Fast Six. Director Justin Lin, who helmed the last three films in the franchise, is also coming back for the next one. Even though he was attached to couple of big projects, one of them being another Terminator film with Arnold Schwarzenegger probably coming back as the main character, he had to step down from directing since he already signed for more Fast & Furious movies. Now, talking to Hero Complex, he shared more info on the project, as well as planning to return is the studio decides to wait. You can read some of it below, and for the full interview, click the link at the bottom of the page. "Those first two 'Terminator' films, we have such a strong connection to it and there's always a desire to revisit anything that

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Wolvie09/news/?a=47757&t=Director Justin Lin On Turning Down A New Terminator Film>