Talking to Comicus, Johnny Whitworth has discussed his role as Blackout in Ghost Rider: Spirit of Vengeance as well as letting slip a few interesting stories from his time one set. While many fans remain sceptical about this movie (which isn't technically a sequel to the 2007 film directed by Mark Steven Johnson) it seems that one thing which can be guaranteed at this point is some quality action set pieces courtesy of hands-on directors Neveldine/Taylor. The following interview is translated from Italian and more can be found by clicking on the link below.   On His Character In Ghost Rider: Spirit Of Vengeance: I play the villain: he is a mercenary named Ray Carrigan, who is a sociopath with anger issues and some homicide tendencies. But then, I also play the villain Blackout, like the double changes into it. And this Blackout is just a psychopath with supernatural powers and cool hair. On Working

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a =54593&t=Johnny_Whitworth_Talks_GHOST_RIDER_SPIRIT_OF_VENGEANCE