

While Watchmen wasn't a huge hit at the box office - possibly down to the fact it was so expensive to make - it left all but creator Alan Moore and a few disgruntled fans satisfied with the adaptation they received courtesy of Man of Steel and 300 director Zack Snyder. Following the recent announcement that the comic book series will now receive a number of prequels featuring the various characters (entitled Before Watchmen) the speculation that we might see the likes of the Comedian back on the big screen have already begun and was recently addressed by actor Matthew Goode. It seems unlikely, but who knows what will happen if the comic book prequels are a big enough success?! Many thanks to Digital Spy for the following. "I've heard they are doing these. It's not Alan Moore or Dave Gibbons who are doing it, but they've got some of the best.

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=55102&t=Matthew\_Goode\_Expresses\_Interest\_In\_Big\_Screen\_WATCHMEN\_Prequel