

Deadpool 2 may have lost Tim Miller just around a week ago, but according to a new report from Mashable, 20th Century Fox may already be closing in on John Wick co-director David Leitch to helm the hotly anticipated sequel, which will once again star Ryan Reynolds in the title role. Details on Miller's departure remain murky, but it's rumored that Reynolds & Miller clashed over the budget as well as casting decisions, amongst other things. The film still doesn't have a start date just yet, but did recently start testing female leads for Domino. Leitch is best known for his storied work as a stunt coordinator and performer, where he coincidentally has a long history with Fox, having worked on stunts for several of their high-concept action films, including Blade, Fight Club, Daredevil, and X-Men Origins: Wolverine, a project he also worked on with Reynolds. His stunt resume also includes work on The Matrix Revolutions, Van Helsing, and The Bourne Ultimatum. He recently made the shift up to

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/deadpool/20th-century-fox-reportedly-eyeing-john-wick-co-director-david-leitch-a146356>