right now, comic book movies are easily the biggest and most successful genre in Hollywood and across the globe. Sure, we still get the odd dud, but for the most part, things are looking good for these movies, so why exactly do they still not get any serious awards attention?
They've been around for decades now, but not a single one has managed to walk away with the Best Picture gong at the Oscars. An award like that obviously isn't the be all and end all, but it is a stamp of approval. Throw in
