

Twitchfilm have posted their review of Conan The Barbarian. It's not what you would call a thumbs up, but it's not nearly as scathing as the first review we posted and suggests that there will be something to enjoy for action/gore fans at least and praise Jason Momoa's performance.

The negative points they make are pretty much the same as the Playlist's: bad script, pacing, dialog etc so I'll just post the positive excerpts.. ..for its many flaws, unoriginal plot, wooden acting and atrocious pacing, Conan succeeds on some level because it fulfills the quota of a manly man beating stuff to a pulp. ..All of the scenes are driven by exposition, some set pieces are tame, others are quite stunning but it is too jarring and each scene simply strings onto the next. Jason Momoa is excellent as Conan, he kills stuff really well, demeans women and eats stuff really fast, there is
