

Source: LA Times HeroComplex As recounted by Susan Karlin of the LA Times HeroComplex, Michael Rooker attended the recent Aliens to Zombie convention in Hollywood carrying a large box of life-sized prosthetic severed hands that he planned to dole out as souvenirs. “Thirty years honing my craft, and it’s come to this,” he joked. Of course, all the fans of the hit AMC drama The Walking Dead know what those mementos represent. After a long absence, Rooker looks to make his return on the show this coming Sunday and we can only hope he brings the same mix of humor, bigotry, and badassness that made Merle an instant fan favorite during Season One. “Nobody expected this level of Merle worship,” said Rooker with a laugh. “He’s such an out-there, crazy, anything goes kind of guy. There’s an uncertainty about Merle – like he’ll come back when you least expect it. He’s the boogeyman, and viewers

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=49673&t=Actor_emMichael_Rookerem_On_The_Return_of_Merle_On_emThe_Walking_Deadem_And_e_mCall_Of_Duty_Black_Opsem