

Source: Buzzine Izumi Hasegawa of Buzzine has a truly great interview with actor Sam Worthington, primarily focusing on his new indie film, Texas Killing Fields, but the actor also reflects on his career to date in an open and frank conversation. I read this article a while ago and was impressed with Sam's responses and with the news that the less-than-spectacular "Clash of the Titans" has somehow been greenlit by Warner Bros. for a third movie before the sequel was even released, I thought I better share this with the CBM community to hopefully bring some optimism. Kudos to Izumi for the great interview. IH: On how to balance the small films with the blockbusters? SW: I think I'm pretty lucky to start with. If you get something like Avatar, it opens up a lot of big blockbuster doors. But there was a thing my mate told me years ago, when I said,

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=49308&t=Actor_Sam_Worthingtons_Candid_Discussion_About_His_Past_And_Future_Movie_Choices