

Fans of Young Justice have spent years campaigning to bring back the critically acclaimed series, but despite having 25 million viewers across two seasons when it aired on Cartoon Network and a devoted fanbase that remains committed to it, a third season happening seemed damn near impossible. Well, think again! Warner Bros. Animation has officially announced that production on Young Justice has started back up, though there's currently no word on when or where it will end up being aired. Apparently, season three will deliver, "new twists, turns and dangerous new threats for the team, but most importantly, the opportunity for fans to finally continue the adventures of some of their favorite Super Heroes." Praised for its animation style and long-form storytelling, Young Justice revolved around Nightwing, Robin, Aqualad, Kid Flash, Superboy, Miss Martian and a host of others as they set out to prove to their Justice League mentors that they had what it takes to be heroes. The press release also
