

Talking to TV Line about ABC's new Charlie's Angels series, Smallville co-creator Al Gough has shared his thoughts on the finale, as well as revealing how it would have originally ended and the relationship between the television and movie divisions over at Warner Bros. Gough copped to not keeping up on the show, especially during the past year as he groomed ABC's Angels, so he "thought a lot of [the series finale] was confusing." But, he allows, "It's hard to wrap up any show that's gone 10 years, and I think they did the best they could." Gough confirmed for me that back when he and Miles Millar (also an EP on Angels) first launched Smallville, "The final image was always [Clark Kent] suiting up [as Superman] and flying away - but back in the day there was going to be more of thing with him and Lex (played by Rosenbaum).... It

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=43884&t=Al_Gough_Calls_Smallville_Finale_Confusing_Comments_On_Conflict_With_WB_Film_Division