

Speaking at the DREDD panel at the London Film and Comic Con yesterday, screenwriter Alex Garland has offered up some new details on the possibility of a second and third instalment in the franchise, reports Bleeding Cool. He apparently told fans in attendance that DREDD will need to make at least $50 million at the North American box office in order to make a sequel a possibility. While there were plans to introduce Judge Death in the upcoming reboot starring Karl Urban as the title character, the villain (and the Dark Judges) are being saved for the third film. The second will take Judge Dredd to the Cursed Earth. Whether or not all this will become a reality depends entirely on just how well the film is received this September... During a routine day on the job, Dredd is assigned to train and evaluate Cassandra Anderson, a rookie with powerful psychic abilities

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=63241>