

Alex Kurtzman, who was one of the writers on J.J. Abrams' Star Trek along Roberto Orci, as well as being a co-creator, writer and executive producer of Fox's science fiction television series Fringe, talked to Movies.com about The Amazing Spider-Man. It was recently revealed that both Orci and Kurtzman will pen the upcoming sequel, which is set for May 2, 2014 release. The interview below contains some spoilers, so if you don't want to know anything, stop reading now. When asked about the sequel, and it seems that folks over at Movies.com have seen The Amazing Spider-Man, they asked if Norman Osborn will be a potential villain, to which Kurtzman replied: "I can't really talk about it. What I can say is how amazingly impressed I was with what they did. I was a huge fan of Sam [Raimi's] movies. My God. When you look back at the superhero movies of the last

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Wolvie09/news/?a=61672>