

Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice had a lot of cool moments, but chief among them was that warehouse scene. While many fans were understandably disappointed to see Ben Affleck's Caped Crusader murder a bunch of dudes, it was truly like seeing the comic books come to life as he leapt into action in a bid to save Martha Kent. Now, a new batch of behind-the-scenes images have surfaced. You can check those out below courtesy of Heroic Hollywood, while they also caught up with assistant director Damon Caro and visual effects supervisor Bryan Hirota. You can read that over at the site, and it's revealed that it was the first scene shot by Zack Snyder due to its complexity and that the only time Batman was CGI was when he blasted through the floor. The hero's cape was also a special effect! What do you guys think of these new images? As always, let us know in the comments section!

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/batman_vs_superman/amazing-behind-the-scenes-photos-and-details-from-batman-v-a148781