

We've all heard the rumors...supposedly, Marc Webb changed Spider-Man's origin story just a bit to make Peter's parents be the source of his powers, not necessarily the spider bite. After fanboy screams, he allegedly went back to do reshoots to help incorporate the spider bite more into the story. As it turns out, that was a rumor that started on the internet and has no basis in reality, according to the movie's director. In an interview with Huffington Post, Marc Webb tries to put those rumors to rest once and for all: Huffington Post: I have heard rumors that you wanted Peter's parents to be the source of his powers, not the traditional accidental radioactive spider bite. There are rumors of a reshoot to incorporate the more traditional spider bite. Marc Webb: I think there was something on the internet. Huffington Post: I want to clear that up. Marc Webb: It's completely false. Huffington Post: So

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Fi/news/?a=62381>