

Talking to /Film, Taylor Kitsch has once again expressed interest in returning for a John Carter sequel; also revealing why exactly he's looking forward to bringing the Edgar Rice Burroughs created character back to the big screen. "It's such an origin story for JC, this one, and you're always trying to ground yourself, in the first weeks of any film, of the tone, the character, of all that stuff. But now we have it," he said. "This sequel, we're landing and we're going full tilt. So that's what I'm excited to do. You guys will know where John is so there's no explaining the back story anymore. And I know where Stanton's going with it and it's pretty great." However, he did make it clear that he won't return for a second instalment without director Andrew Stanton. "Him? Yeah. Yeah I won't do it unless it's him." Of course, as with most

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=55155&t=Andrew_Stanton_And_Taylor_Kitsch_Talk_About_Returning_For_A_JOHN_CARTER_Sequel