

Days ago, three actresses—Imogen Poots, Felicity Jones, Anna Kendrick—were revealed as contenders for the undisclosed lead female role in the forthcoming Marvel sequel, Captain America: The Winter Soldier. And now questionable sources from Vietnam newspaper Laodong are apparently quoting the anticipated film's co-director, Anthony Russo, suggesting that the latter actress listed will likely get the role. [Google Translate:] “There are a lot of good talent, but Anna Kendrick gently mixes features tough, especially over time, she has proven her own ability. Can't say anything, but we do not deny hope to have the opportunity to collaborate with her in the near future” Again, these “close sources” are in indeed questionable. Therefore, don't be surprised if news emerges that contradicts what's being reported above. Anyhow, in case Anna Kendrick does land the role, it's somewhat relevant to know the 27-year-old actress received an Academy Award nomination for Best Supporting Actress for her

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=66179>