

While speaking to The Playlist about turning down an offer to direct Die Hard 5 (now titled A Good Day To Die Hard) the writer/director confirms that he and Ant-Man director Edgar Wright have turned in their final draft for that movie to Marvel and that he is very proud of it. But it seems that nothing is set in stone. Cornish says it's in Marvel's hands now. But intriguingly he also responds to a prompt from The Playlist that the script could possibly feature not only Hank Pym, but some other "Ant-Men".. From The Playlist As for whether or not the movie itself is moving forward remains up in the air. "I don't know, man. I'd love for it to happen but it's really up to Edgar and Marvel," Cornish said. We had heard that at one point Cornish and Wright were going to put several of the Ant-Men (meaning people that

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/rorschachsrants/news/?a=48236&t=iAnt-Mani_Script_Could_Feature_Multiple_Ant-MEN