

We haven't heard much about the big screen version of The Last Days of American Crime, which is based on the graphic novel of the same name. Back in 2010, Sam Worthington confirmed that he signed on to star in the film, and that they are trying to find a director. At some point, the Law Abiding Citizen director F. Gary Gray was attached to helm The Last Days of American Crime, but I guess that is not happening. According to Deadline, music video director Anthony Mandler is in talks to bring this graphic novel to the big screen, and that would be his feature directing debut. Report doesn't mention anything about Worthington, and if he is still set to portray a guy that assembles a team to pull off his final big heist. One thing that we didn't know, is that Noomi Rapace was also attached to star, but nothing
