

A couple of months ago, James Wan shared this photo of a sunny, picturesque location he was scouting for Aquaman, and earlier today the director posted another pic to his Instagram page. Although this area is also stunning to look at, it definitely looks a lot colder! The caption accompanying the image reads: "If casting is half of your directing, then location is half your photography." The exact location is not specified, but from the looks of this snap it could well wind up doubling for Amnesty Bay - the small coastal town that was home to Aquaman's adoptive father, Tom Curry.

If casting is half of your directing, then location is half your photography. #happysnap
