

We've heard an awful lot about the problems which initially surrounded the production of Gore Verbinski's The Lone Ranger, so it's refreshing to now get some insight from star Armie Hammer on his take on the iconic character. In the latest issue of Empire Magazine, he reveals that his take on the iconic lawman shares some notable similarities with Batman, and to a lesser extent, Spider-Man. Be sure to pick up the latest issue of the publication to read more of his and Verbinski's comments on the project, and sound off with your thoughts in the usual place! "It's the rock 'n' roll Lone Ranger, actually. Our take is darker and more complex, more action-packed and more badass than the old TV show. It's a 21st century version of the character you know. There's a little of the Dark Knight in him. There's less moral ambiguity, but there are definite similarities. They're

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=69236>