

While filming for Marvel's The Avengers was underway in Cleveland, Ohio, countless set videos and photos showcased a scene shot depicting the Military Police joining NYPD forces against the mystery secondary villains of the highly-anticipated film. And recently elaborating on the experience, via U.S. Army, check out what they had to say below. Twenty-five Soldiers assigned to the Columbus, Ohio-based 391st Military Police Battalion were battling bad guys with Captain America and his Avengers superheroes during an intensive battle scene that will soon play out in movie theaters worldwide in 2012. "The combat scenes had great realism," said Lt. Col. John Clearwater, deputy director for OCPA-LA. "It's a tribute to the U.S. Army Reserves and the veteran 391st MP Battalion. They rocked the streets of Cleveland with their 50-caliber machine guns and Mark-19's. The film crew was blown away by their firepower and teamwork." Staff Sgt. Michael T. Landis said he hopes the Army

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=49543&:t=Army_Reserve_Soldiers_Recall_Filming_Climatic_Scenes_For_iThe_Avengersi