

It appears Arnold Schwarzenegger really is back. The "Governator" tells Action Effects that he has committed to not one, but two more Terminator movies. He says he will need to get into the best shape possible for the role, and that despite some reservations from those involved, it will indeed follow on from the last movie, Terminator Salvation.. "I can't say to much they want it held in secret if you know what I mean, but I will say that next year I will start filming it and it's going to be one of the hardest films I have ever done I can tell you that already for sure", Schwarzenegger said "... they have six months set aside just for filming, so I will be training and getting into the best physical shape I possibly can before filming starts. It does follow Salvation although some of the producers and franchise owner were
