

Warcraft: The Beginning was supposed to break the bad video game movie curse, but even with a filmmaker as talented as Duncan Jones at the helm, it still disappointed. As a result, all eyes turned to Assassin's Creed and...well, that too has seemingly let down fans based on the first wave of reviews to have surfaced today! One or two are relatively positive, but most really don't go easy on the film. Despite having a team behind the camera every bit as impressive as in front of it, it appears as if the decision to focus on setting up a franchise has ultimately hurt Assassin's Creed, though the story and tone honestly don't sound very good either. While fans of the games may end up liking the movie, this reviews are bad news for its chances of box office success, but great for Rogue One: A Star Wars Story. Have these reviews put you off seeing Assassin's Creed? Let us know in the
