

When it was announced that DC Comics and Warner Brothers would be bringing new life into the Superman film franchise a few years back, rather than continuing the series Bryan Singer took over in 2006, one of the biggest wishes from fans was to have a more physical threat for the Man of Steel to oppose. Previously, Lex Luthor has been the main villain for Kal-El and I believe that to be ok-- to an extent. While Luthor is the main Baddie for Superman, he provides a cerebral threat and that's about all we've seen. In the 1980 film Superman II, General Zod made an appearance and he and his cronies provided that threat, giving fans and movie-goers alike, a better action flick than the first outing (which is still a great film, by the way). And with Zack Snyder's Man of Steel coming out in 2013, we see the return of

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/geekboymovienews/news/?a=55307&t=Baddies_That_Need_Movie_Love_Bizarro