

Every once in a while, I need to resurrect a "Baddie" that has already been featured in a film, mostly due to the fact that the first interpretation of the character was so bad, they need to be given a second chance just to show off what they are really like. Case in point: Doctor Doom. Doom was originally featured in Tim Story's 2005 Fantastic Four film and again in 2007's Fantastic Four: Rise of the Silver Surfer, both time splayed by Julian McMahon. I'll be honest, I didn't totally hate the casting of McMahon, as he is a fairly decent actor. The problem comes from the fact that the character was written so badly, McMahon was doomed (pun intended) from the get go; he didn't stand a chance to make something of the character, which was a neutered version of the comic book character that we all know and love so

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/geekboymovienews/news/?a=50660&t=Baddies_That_Need_Movie_Love_Doctor_Doom