

In Part 9 of my ongoing series, Baddies That Need Movie Love, I am sticking with Marvel once again, and bringing you one of the greatest and most fierce villains to ever challenge the Avengers. Having been reincarnated multiple times, Ultron is a "problem" of epic proportions, with only one goal in mind: destruction of humanity. Ultron could arguably be the greatest invention of Hank Pym, but he could also be considered one of his worst. Ultron began as a simple robot, a torso with arms on tank treads. But it wasn't the physical appearance that was important. Dr. Henry "Hank" Pym placed consciousness in Ultron, using his own brain patterns as a model for the robot's programming, giving him great intellect. But along with that, Ultron gained Pym's mental instability. The main difference is that Ultron had no conscience to keep that instability in check. To Pym's surprise, the robot developed
