

Jared Leto's take on The Joker has divided fans, though with much of his performance left on the cutting room floor, whether or not we can fairly judge the Oscar winning actor's take on the iconic villain in Suicide Squad is hard to say. However, Mark Hamill, who has played the Clown Prince of Crime longer than anyone else, has now shared his thoughts on Leto's performance. So, what's his verdict? During an interview with Polygon, Hamill reportedly told the site that he loved his take on The Joker, but did add that he's yet to see a version that's made him say, "That was terrible." Hamill instead explained that he looks at each iteration for what that version needs to be at the time we meet them. "Everyone brings a different spin to the character and you have to look at each script separately," Hamill said. "I don't think there's a definitive version of the Joker and I don't think there can

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/suicide\_squad/batman-the-killing-joke-star-mark-hamill-shares-his-thoughts-on-a146852