

Beauty and the Beast is tracking for a monstrous debut next month, with some early reports suggesting it could top $200 million domestic in its opening weekend, which would be another major win for Walt Disney Pictures. It will face heavy competition from Logan (March 3), Kong: Skull Island (March 10), and Power Rangers (March 24) upon release, but considering the vastly different audiences, not many are expecting the three male-centric action/adventure films to pose any sort of serious threat to the live-action Disney adaptation in the long-run. The highly anticipated Bill Condon-directed film stars Emma Watson (Harry Potter) and Dan Stevens (Legion) in the two titular roles, leading an impressive ensemble, that will feature in live-action and animated roles. Earlier today, Entertainment Weekly released their latest cover, which features Watson front-and-center, along with five exclusive stills that tease key moments throughout the movie.
