

There was a time that Ben Affleck was considered a joke in Hollywood. Between starring in terrible films like Gigli and the ridiculous "Bennifer" tabloid craze, things weren't looking good for the actor. However, that would all change when he made the decision to step behind the camera with 2007's Gone Baby Gone. Later, he would also direct (and star in) The Town, while his latest film (Argo - the trailer and synopsis of which can be found below) looks set to be another critical and financial success. Talking to Details, Affleck has looked back on that period in his career, specifically highlighting Daredevil as one of the starring roles he most regrets. "I made a bunch of movies that didn't work. I was ending up in the tabloids. I don't know what the lesson is, except that you just have to find your compass. I liked Sum of All Fears. Daredevil

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=67193>