

Now that Rogue One: A Star Wars Story is in theatres, it's been easy to spot some of the instances where the much-discussed reshoots took place. A multitude of scenes - both big and small - that were marketed in the trailers are notably absent, specifically in the film's final act. Despite the positive reaction to the film, many were disappointed to not see some pretty great scenes, such as the shot of Jyn Erso striding defiantly towards a TIE Fighter, or Saw Gerrera's ominous speech. While we may never know the real reason why these awesome scenes were excised, actor Ben Mendelsohn (Director Orson Krennic) has hinted to Collider that there is a majorly different version of the film out there. As with most movies, when filming his scenes, Mendelsohn would perform different deliveries of his lines. Usually this is done so when the film goes to the editing bay, the director and editor have the option to choose the best
