

I'm sure any CBMer of a certain age, or even those wise enough to catch some re-runs, remember the Kung Fu Tv series fondly. It starred the late David Carradine as a Shaolin Monk possessed of great martial arts skills as he wanders the American wild west in search of his brother, adventure and enlightenment. It was pretty damn awesome. And now Legendary Entertainment are bringing us a big screen version with none other than Hudson himself at the helm.. Bill Paxton is in talks to direct Kung Fu, a screen adaptation of the classic 1972 TV series that starred David Carradine. Paxton, who's coming off a run in the HBO series Big Love, gets the job after helming two solid films: Frailty and The Greatest Game Ever Played. John McLaughlin will write the script. It will be nice to see ol Grasshopper up there on the cinema screen. Kung Fu was

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/rorschachsrants/news/?a=49205&t=Bill_Paxton_Set_To_Direct_Big_Screen_Version_Of_Kung_Fu