

SMTV has picked up on an open casting call for Ryan Coogler's Black Panther, which might give us an idea of one particular aspect of the plot. It seems Marvel is looking for men, women, and children to play Wakandans (so surprise there), as well as Korean and Filipino men and women for street scenes - but here's the interesting bit: they're also for people of all ethnicities (with real world weaponry experience) to play CIA agents. Though the majority of the story will most likely play out in Wakanda, this does seem to confirm that T'Challa will be returning to the US at some point - unless of course the CIA make the trip to Panther's homeland in an effort to bring him in for his actions in Captain America: Civil War. Either way, it definitely looks like we're going to witness the ramifications of T'Challa aiding Steve Rogers and Bucky Barnes in the character's solo big screen outing. Black Panther stars

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/black_panther/black-panther-open-casting-call-may-provide-some-hints-about-the-a146633