

We've heard before that Christopher Nolan was interested in directing a James Bond film at some point in his career and it turns out that Bond is just as interested in Christopher Nolan. And if Skyfall director Sam Mendes was indeed influenced by Christopher Nolan's The Dark Knight then it makes sense for producers to look at the inspiring auteur if they're pleased with Skyfall's finished product. The film's associate-producer Gregg Wilson, son of long-time Bond producer Michael G. Wilson, has gone on record stating that "Christopher Nolan would be a 'dream' choice for a future Bond director. We would of course be interested to have a discussion with him. We would like to do the same type of movie. It would be a dream to be with Nolan. But we always have an open mind when it comes to directors." Just this past summer Nolan stated that he's

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=69249>