

Deadline has their box office report up for the weekend with the first figures for both The Hunger Games and Wrath of the Titans bringing both good and bad news. The good news is for Lionsgate who are expected to reach the $250M mark with The Hunger Games this weekend. As a bonus, it's not only #1 at the box office, but also in the book and album charts in the US. Unfortunately, the news is not quite so good for Warner Bros. sequel, Wrath of the Titans. While it has taken the #2 spot (holding off competition from kid friendly release Mirror Mirror) and will more than likely make its projected $37M, this is far short of Clash of the Titans' $61.2M opening weekend back in 2010. However, it's expected to make back its $150M budget thanks to overseas takings. Despite a mixed reaction from critics, this isn't too bad

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=57218>