

Rogue One: A Star Wars Story has now been in theaters worldwide for two weeks, and in that time, it's made a massive $615.9 million. After earning $19.7 million on Tuesday, the spinoff's international cume was taken up to $275.3 million, and with it performing 8.2% bigger yesterday than on Monday, the first of Lucasfilm's Anthology movies is still going surprisingly strong both overseas and domestically. Right now, it looks set to hit $700 million by Friday, and that's pretty damn incredible. It goes without saying then that Rogue One will ultimately reach $1 billion, but who knows how much higher it will go. It won't surprise you to learn that the movie isn't making as much as Star Wars: The Force Awakens, but in terms of percentages, it is actually outperforming that. With it reaching Korea today and a Chinese release set for January 6th, the sky really is the limit for Rogue One right now, so stay tuned...
