

Speaking to the crowd at a panel during the Wizard World Chicago Comic Convention, legendary B-movie actor, Bruce Campbell had the following to say: Campbell joked that the Evil Dead remake was a “parting gift” to investors, who had been waiting on some type of new installment in the franchise for years. Campbell said they wanted to make a film that, “wasn’t shot in 16MM, where you can’t see the garden hoses spewing the blood.” Campbell then went on to describe the film as being a more “sophisticated” version of the Evil Dead story. “We will be heavily involved in it. Sam Raimi hand-picked Fede Alvarez to direct it... It’s not like we’re just tossing this thing out and farting out a sequel. It’ll be kind of a hand-made movie with a young filmmaker who is more experienced than we were when we made the first one, who will be casting more

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=44443&t=Bruce_Campbell_Highlights_Some_Positives_About_The_Evil_Dead_Remake