

Talking with the LA Times' Hero Complex, Bruce Greenwood - who plays Captain Pike in J.J. Abrams' Star Trek - talks about working with the Enterprise crew for the first time for the upcoming Trek sequel, which began production on Thursday. Greenwood also briefly comments on the script, saying that it's 'good' (as expected), as well as expressing his excitement. Meanwhile, co-writer/producer Damon Lindelof comments on making the highly anticipated sequel worth the long wait, saying that everyone involved with the film has the same ambition. Damon Lindelof On Making The Sequel Worth The Wait... Every single person involved with this movie has the same ambition — to do everything they can to justify the long wait ... to live up to the lofty expectations of 40-year 'Trek' fans and those who are coming to the party for the first time. The energy is crackling. The warp core is primed. And we

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=52817&t=Bruce Greenwood Comments on STAR TREK Family Damon Lindelof On Making The Wait Worth It