

Bryan Cranston recently made an appearance at the Television Critics Association tour to promote his upcoming animated series SuperMansion, and during the event, he shared a few juicy details about his upcoming role as Zordon in the Power Rangers movie. First, speaking with The A.V. Club, Cranston let it slip that he's seen a good chunk of the movie, thanks to ongoing ADR sessions, and that he's been quite taken with what he's seen so far: "This movie is actually gonna be a big deal. I've seen a lot of it, because I'm doing ADR on it. And it's impressive. Dean Israelite really has a nice touch. As big and as powerful as Power Rangers could be, he has a nice touch to keep it grounded, and real. I think it's gonna turn some heads, I really do." That should be music to the ears of many anxious fans. In a separate much lengthier interview with IGN, the Academy Award-nominated actor elaborated on how

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/action/bryan-cranston-says-the-power-rangers-movie-is-impressive-teases-zordons-a148192>