

It seems that whenever a writer leaves Marvel, their luck takes a sudden upturn. Mark Millar now finds himself with several successful creator owned franchises, numerous movie deals and a job as 20th Century Fox's creative consultant. Robert Kirkman has dominated sales charts with The Walking Dead and the AMC adaptation of that series is one of the most successful on television. We could go on, but let's get to Ed Brubaker (Captain America, The Winter Soldier) who it has now been revealed by The Hollywood Reporter has sold two small screen projects to Fox and NBC. While neither seem to have any direct connections to his comic book work, Fox's Rising Suns, "centers on an American Yakuza underboss fighting for his life – sometimes with martial arts skills he honed during his time in Japan – as he gets involved with the female FBI agent who's hunting him." Brubaker is

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=68527>