

Variety is reporting that Warner Bros., Village Roadshow, and Team Downey have put together a writers' room with several top names, including Nicole Perlman (Captain Marvel; Guardians of the Galaxy), Justin Malen (Baywatch), Gary Whitta (Rogue One: A Star Wars Story), Geneve Dworet-Robertson (Tomb Raider), and Kieran Fitzgerald (Snowden). This is only the first step in making the long-rumored film a reality, but it's sounding more and more likely it goes on floors late next year or early 2018 after Robert Downey Jr. (Captain America: Civil War) fulfills his commitments on Marvel Studios' highly anticipated Avengers: Infinity War, which is expected to begin its long production schedule next February. In addition to Downey, Jude Law (King Arthur: Legend of the Sword) is also expected to return as Dr. John Watson and Guy Ritchie (King Arthur: Legend of the Sword), who helmed the first two installments, is once again expected to be in the director's chair for the third installment. So, what do you guys think? Sound off with
