

Two years ago, director Joseph Khan and producer Adi Shankar presented POWER/RANGERS, a short fan film based on Saban's colorful heroes of the same name. The film, which starred Katee Sackhoff and James Van Der Beek, was an R-rated take on the kid-friendly Power Rangers mythos, with plenty of violent action and mature themes. Saban wasn't exactly thrilled with the film, as they were working on their own reboot that is now due for release in a few months. Shankar initially said the film was meant as a standalone, mature analysis of the Power Rangers concept, but it seems that he now has something a little more ambitious in mind. In an interview with Polygon, Shankar confirmed that he is working on an R-rated Power Rangers animated series that would adapt the first three seasons of the original TV show. "It's a complete retelling of the first three seasons," Shankar said. "And it's going to be really f*cking dark. Darker than any other

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/action/castlevania-showrunner-adi-shankar-is-working-on-an-r-rated-power-rangers-a148842>