

Saturday's conference was held at Sony Studios. At the event PGA executive director Vance Van Petten asked Nolan if he is planning a fourth Batman film. "No" was the answer that Nolan gave. When he began working on the script with his brother, he told Jonathan, "I don't want to save anything." He acknowledged Richard Donner's Superman as having an influence upon his pitch for Batman Begins. As Donner's version of the Man of Steel strayed from the comic book stories and was still quite successful. "I explained the potential of what was exciting to me. There really had not been an origin story about this extraordinary figure in an ordinary world." Instead of worrying about pleasing fans of the comic books Nolan focuses most of his effort on telling the best story. "The source material is irrelevant. The challenge with Batman is to find what is a believable character. You put your stamp

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/nailbiter111/news/?a=61312>