

In yet another segment from Total Film's visit to the set of Marvel's much-anticipated Captain America: The First Avenger film, director Joe Johnston recalled finding a leading man, and eventually seeing 'Steve Rogers' in actor Chris Evans. The actor himself also reminisces coming on board, as well reiterates his self-doubt. And with Johnston also revealing Evans' reaction after seeing a final cut, read on below. "We had some artwork and we took Chris and put him in the outfit without him knowing it, just to see how great he would look," remembers Johnston. He and the producers considered a multitude of other actors, but none had "that spark." I don't think we even screentested Chris once we found him and convinced him that this would be the movie to do." "Nobody in my life said don't do it," Evans reveals. "Everybody was like, 'Are you an idiot? Do this!' I started thinking, 'Maybe I'm just

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=39650&:t=Chris_Evans_Joe_Johnston_Reminisce_iCaptain_Americais_Casting_Process_Final_Cut_Reactions