

Late last month, Marvel Studios set an official release date for the sequel to their Kenneth Branagh-directed Thor movie, along with the unfortunate news that Branagh won't be returning to helm. And chatting recently with the L.A. Times' Hero Complex, the star behind the Mighty Avenger, Chris Hemsworth shared saddened his thoughts on Branagh's decision. "I'm really disappointed," Hemsworth said of Branagh's decision to pass on "Thor 2," "Ken built that character and everything I know about the Thor world I learned while shoulder-to-shoulder with Ken. I learned so much from him. As long as he's happy that's the thing," said Hemsworth, who left San Diego to return to the New Mexico set of "The Avengers." "I learned so much from Ken while we built [the first film] so at least I had that time with someone like that. The start of anything creative is the most important period in a way.

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=43099&t=Chris_Hemsworth_Shares_Thoughts_On_Kenneth_Branagh_Passing_On_THOR_Sequel