

HC: "Thor 2" is around the corner. Are you excited to work with "Game of Thrones" director Alan Taylor? CH: Yeah, yeah, actually my wife got me into "Game of Thrones," and we started sort of on the Internet watching them every week and became obsessed with them. And then I was given the whole series because Alan was meeting to do "Thor 2." What I loved is [that the show] had a sort of mythical element to it, yet it was grounded in a really organic reality. And that's what I think would be nice about "Thor 2" — if there were more sort of tangible environments to be involved in. The first "Thor" was sort of science-fiction, and there were a lot of sets and things. It would be nice to kind of have Asgard as somewhat relatable and have big waterfalls and cliffs and mountains, and then have in
