

Talking to Empire Magazine, Chris Hemsworth has commented briefly on the friction between The Avengers, focusing specifically on Thor and Captain America. "They're used to being leaders and if you put them all in a room, it's going to be about who runs the show," he said. "They all have some friction, absolutely, but it's about the journey of the team." However, the main reason for the team coming to blows is apparently a fairly simple one. The villainous Loki and his mysterious "alien" army. "Thor has a different opinion about how this should be taken care of, because it's his brother," the actor revealed. "I think it's heartbreaking, because he feels very responsible for why Loki has spiralled off. He keeps trying to appeal to whatever good was once there." "There's a couple of shots in the trailer of Thor and Captain America duking it out and that gives you an idea

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=51444&t=Chris_Hemsworth_On_The_Tension_Between_Captain_America_And_Thor_In_THE_AVENGERS