

Chris Hemsworth has gone from a relative unknown actor when he starred in 2011's Thor to now landing male leads in some high profile films, with the last one being Ron Howard's racing film, Rush. Now, according to Deadline Hemsworth has landed the male lead in Steven Spielberg's next major tentpole, the technological thriller, Robopocalypse. The film is set to open in theaters April 25, 2014. Unofficial Synopsis - In the future, robots have been created to serve Mankind. Archos, the 14th version of an advanced Artificial Intelligence developed by the U.S. government, continuously deleted for displaying hostility towards humans, escapes from being destroyed and soon becomes a virus, downloading itself into every piece of A.I.-controlled technology in the planet, leading to a worldwide robot uprising where the humans caught in the chaos struggle to survive.
