

Continuing tomorrow at London's Butlers Wharf, principal photography for Marvel's Thor: The Dark World is scheduled this month to "showcase London in a major way." However, we've now received confirmation that filming will soon head north, overseas in Iceland, which was first reported back in early August. While attending The Times Cheltenham Literature Festival 2012, 'Malekith the Accursed' actor Christopher Eccleston discussed the villain role, confirming he'll take part in the scenes that'll be filmed in the Nordic European island country. Christopher Ecclestone talking about his next project: playing an evil elf in the forthcoming Thor 2. twitter.com/pippybella/sta...— Anna (@pippybella) October 7, 2012 @thor2fans No not really. Only that he was filming in Iceland & that his character was the bad guy with no redeeming features!— Anna (@pippybella) October 7, 2012 According to sources, director Alan Taylor will return to Iceland, where he filmed parts of Game of Thrones, within the next two weeks

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=68340>