

If you're hoping that director Christopher Nolan will have an active hand in any of Warner Bros. plans for a Justice League movie then I have sad tidings to report. The director stated in an interview over the weekend that he has no plans to be involved in a Justice League project. No, none at all," Nolan said. "We're finished with all we're doing with Batman. This is the end of our take on this character. Batman will outlive us all, and our interpretation was ours. Obviously, we consider it definitive and kind of finished. The great thing about Batman is he lives on for future generations to reinterpret, and obviously, Warners will have to decide in the future what they're going to do with him. We've had our say on the character. ... I've got no plans to do anything more, and certainly, no involvement with any 'Justice League' project." He also

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=63311>